What is case management?

Case management is a process that helps people with psychiatric disabilities to achieve their goals and live independently. Case managers work with clients to develop a plan that meets their individual needs. This plan may include services such as:

- Assessment and diagnosis
- Treatment planning
- Coordination of services
- Advocacy
- Support and counseling

Who can benefit from case management?

Case management can benefit people with a variety of psychiatric disabilities, including:

- Schizophrenia
- Bipolar disorder
- Major depression
- Anxiety disorders
- Personality disorders
- Substance abuse disorders

How do I become a case manager?

There are a variety of ways to become a case manager. Some states require case managers to have a bachelor's degree in social work, counseling, or a related field. Other states may allow case managers to have an associate's degree or a high school diploma. In addition, most states require case managers to have experience working with people with disabilities.

What are the benefits of case management?

Case management can provide a number of benefits for people with psychiatric disabilities, including:

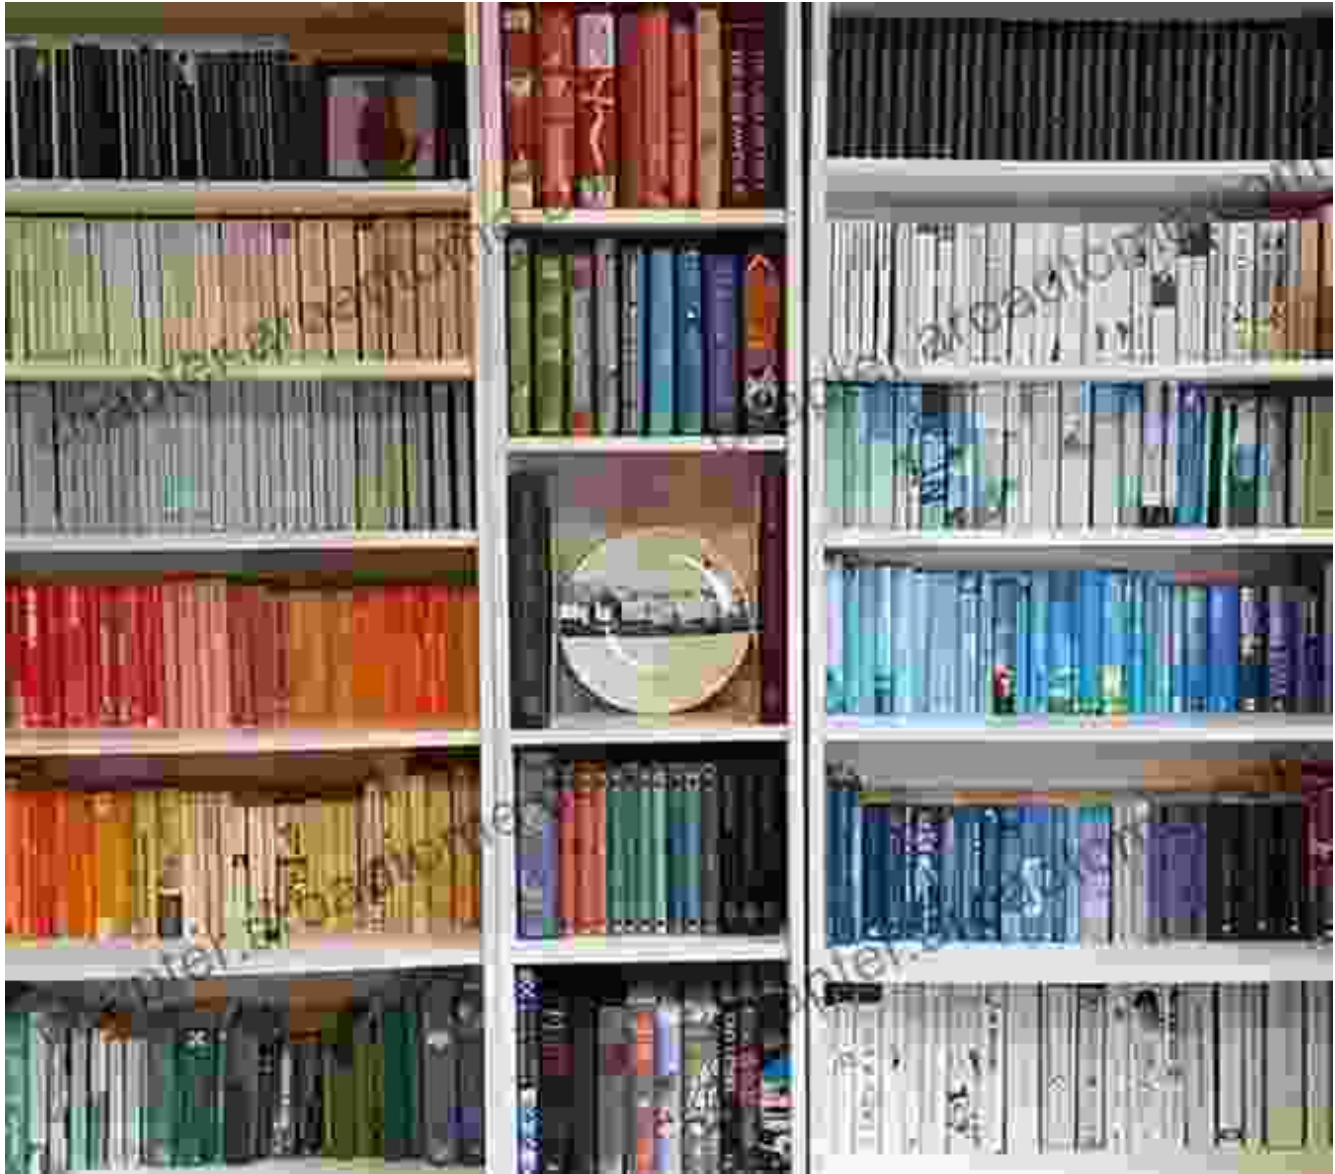

- Improved access to services
- Increased coordination of care
- Reduced symptoms
- Improved functioning
- Increased independence
- Reduced risk of hospitalization

How do I find a case manager?

There are a number of ways to find a case manager. You can ask your doctor, mental health professional, or social worker for a referral. You can also contact your local mental health center or community health center.

Case management is an important service for people with psychiatric disabilities. It can help them to achieve their goals and live independently. If you are struggling with a psychiatric disability, I encourage you to talk to your doctor or mental health professional about case management.
