"Faulkner, I think the model being part of my kind, the real gold, the one who is one accord, and Welty... I think regardless of whether we were all here to see or not, it would be a good thing to see."

— LARRY WATKINS

 Eudora Welty presented fellow Mississippian William Faulkner with the National Institute of Arts and Letters Gold Medal for Literature in New York. This was the first year that Faulkner transferred ownership of Mississippi. He died in Oxford a week later.

The image was taken by a staff photographer from Field Station, a Mississippi-based firm that specializes in equine photography. Notice the horse in the background.
